

Exit Poll

The new administration is in place, and everyone is talking about why and how we could go republican especially after the lessons learned during the last republican presidency. The unbelievable damage done to our nations design and structure during this presidency may never be reversed.

So, what could possibly persuade moral, US loving, American citizens to try this lousy option again? I think there is just one thing that sums it up, "The Creeping Crud". This last Democratic administration worked its way into every aspect of our lives. They seemed to want to define every aspect of our thoughts and actions and of course our finances. The politically entitled cast of insiders has always been there and may always be here. These are professional politicians and what they know how to do is pass laws (that do not apply to anyone they know) and campaign for money. This is a very dangerous two-part formula that is so overused, I don't even know where to start.

I'm working with the federal and state regulations for more than 30 years and have seen some good work that our predecessors have given us to deal with, but wow, what a difference a generation makes! It is just not public service any longer, but more like personal enrichment. Again, the process of campaign and legislate is actively selling this country to the corporate interest, both foreign and domestic. The problem with this is that regulations favoring any specific entity will inevitably be at the expense of the general public and that is just not good government.

We now have so many new laws and power grabs (gimmies) that these guys just don't know where to stop. The government agencies we work with are all preoccupied with the daily drama of consumption. We all want to grow, and government is no different, bigger budgets, more staffing, shorter hours, more holidays, personal days, sick days, better pay and job security. Yes, this is the American dream, I get it... There is just one issue, growth needs fuel which means we must also grow the problems. Dysfunctional government entities seem to be one answer, work slow, support stupidity, take all your days, double and triple process whenever you can and complain about the lack of resources. That's just a normal union work ethic, but it's the politicians who really put on the fat. These guys are clueless of operations, Office of Management and Budgets is a rubber stamp and a joke. (Sorry, but I had to be frank there.) These guys dole out the money wherever their agenda takes them with little or no regard to the actual operations or consequences. So what about all the damn good people working for our government? HR and the special interest are trying to get rid of them, (We really need to take a careful look at the human resources divisions and make sure we are not be consumed from within.)

Ok more government more, laws, taxes, criminals, jails, guards, police, lawyers, etc... OK, but if you crush small business in the process where is the growth going to come from? This is America and the country we leave our children and their children should have the same uniquely American opportunity. So please don't get me wrong, I'm just saying that there is a huge difference between good government and the very bad government we have been experiencing from the last 16 years... So, the Elephant in the room is not all the gossip or media spin, it's the quantum awareness of where we are at.
